The work of reading the essays will be started at once. The monumental task is to be pushed to completion as rapidly as is consistent with conscientious discrimination as to the relative merits of the hundreds of essays that have been submitted.

The essays haven't even been counted. In the earlier stages of the contest, before the entries began to come in bunches, the prize essay contest editor made an effort to keep account of the number, but the task soon grew too big and all count was lost. All that can be said is that hundreds and hundreds of essays have been submitted by Washington residents in the effort to land one of the substantial cash prizes to be awarded by The Star.

The army endurance test promises to be interesting. Gen. James A. Buchanan, president of the show, will present a thoroughbred colt to the officer winning this number and, while the 2d Cavalry, temporarily quartered at Fort Myer during the absence of the 5th Cavalry in Mexico, probably will furnish the bulk of the entries, it is by no means certain it will win the prize, as there are to be entries from other army posts that promise to make the competition interesting.
